A daydreaming snail

On Sunday May the eighth, Gail, a daydreaming snail, was running late for her train, She was taking a holiday with her mate named, Dale.

It started to rain so Gail picked up pace and grabbed the tail of a passing snake. The snake shook his tail, making Gail sail straight into a bale of hay. Beside the hay an ape lay, contained in a crate for freight.

The ape ate some hay, which made Gail afraid, looking for a way to escape. A lady placed a quail in a baby's cradle and Gail thought that seemed a safe place to stay.

The lady carried the cradle onto the train as a rainbow appeared after the rain.

Gail waved to the snake and ape as she drifted back daydreaming of her holiday by the lake.
